CHILDREN'S MOVEMENT FOR CIVIC AWARENESS

Who Drives the Bus?

Talking about gender with children

CMCA
Illustrated by Kiran Shenoy

2022 · English · CC BY-NC 4.0
Arivu Kendra sample edition · Government of Karnataka

Contents

1. The bus 3
2. The kitchen 8
3. The clinic 13
4. The field 18
5. The classroom 23
6. Draw your own 28

This is a generated sample edition created for the Arivu Kendra public preview. The text on these pages is placeholder prose so that reading tools, previews and downloads can be demonstrated end to end. The real edition will be supplied by the content provider.

CHAPTER 1

The bus

Who drives the bus? Who cooks? Who is the doctor, the farmer, the soldier, the teacher? A picture book that asks children to draw the person before turning the page, and then shows them someone they might not have expected.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

CHAPTER 2
The kitchen

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

CHAPTER 3

The clinic

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly.

What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

CHAPTER 4

The field

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six.

Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

CHAPTER 5

The classroom

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

CHAPTER 6

Draw your own

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly. What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.

The librarian's note: this activity works best in groups of five or six. Let the children lead. Your job is to ask “why?” one more time than feels comfortable, and then to be quiet.

A right is a promise that the country makes to every person in it, written down so that it cannot be forgotten. The Constitution of India makes these promises in a section called the Fundamental Rights, and it makes them to children as much as to adults.

In this activity, draw the person before you turn the page. Do not think too long about it. When everyone has drawn, hold the pictures up together and look at what the group imagined. Then turn the page, and talk about what you see.

The Gram Sabha is the one meeting where every adult in the village has a vote and a voice. It is where the Panchayat explains what it spent and asks what to do next. A question asked here, politely and in public, is one of the most powerful things an ordinary person can do.

Equality does not mean that everyone is the same. It means that the same rules apply to everyone, and that nobody is kept away from a school, a well or a job because of who their parents are, what they believe or whether they are a girl or a boy.

Reflection question: think of a time when you were treated unfairly.

What would have made it fair? Now think of a time when you treated someone else unfairly, even by accident. What would you do differently today? You do not have to say your answer aloud. You only have to think it honestly.